

15. Missing, Delayed, or Lost Package Policy

A package is considered potentially lost when carrier tracking has remained inactive beyond the investigation threshold or the carrier explicitly confirms loss.

For domestic shipments, support may initiate a carrier investigation after 48 hours without movement when the parcel is already outside its expected delivery range. For high-value shipments, the threshold may be reduced when the tracking event indicates a serious exception.

A customer should not be asked to reorder immediately unless there is a clear business reason. Depending on inventory and customer preference, Nimbus Commerce may provide a replacement or refund after the appropriate investigation stage.

If the carrier confirms delivery but the customer cannot locate the parcel, support should verify delivery coordinates or proof-of-delivery information where available. The customer may be asked to check common delivery locations and household or building recipients before a claim is opened.
