

17. Partial Shipment and Split-Order Policy

An order containing multiple products may be shipped in separate parcels because items can originate from different warehouses or sellers.

The order system and tracking page should show each shipment separately when split fulfillment occurs. A customer should not assume that an item is missing merely because the first parcel arrived without all products.

If one shipment is delivered and another remains in transit within its SLA, support should provide the expected tracking information. If the second shipment exceeds the applicable investigation threshold, support may open a delivery investigation.

Refunds for individual missing products should not be issued before checking whether a remaining shipment is active unless policy or customer circumstances justify an exception.
